News Release

New Hire Brings Immense Experience to LarsonAllen

For immediate release

MINNEAPOLIS—April 1, 2009—Brad King has returned to LarsonAllen as a health care consulting principal, a position he previously held from 2002–2005. Before his first stint with LarsonAllen, King served in various health care roles, from controller to vice president. Most recently he was the executive vice president and chief financial officer at Oregon Health & Science University.

“We are excited to have Brad back on the team,” says John Richter, health care principal-in-charge. “He brings a set of experiences that will prove very valuable to our clients in these challenging economic times.”

King’s core competencies are within health care, higher education, and governmental agencies. He has a plethora of experience in health care including strategic planning, enterprise risk management, acquisition work, audit, financial performance improvement, and more. Additionally, he has served as a CFO, chairman, and board member for various health care organizations. King’s higher education responsibilities were as the CFO for a mid-sized university, and as a board member for Willamette University, while his governmental roles were as interim CFO for various organizations.

With his knowledge and experience in health care, education, and governmental entities, King is well prepared for his role as a principal and strategic consultant with LarsonAllen. In this role, he will serve other organizations as interim CFO when needed, as well as focusing on financial performance improvement for LarsonAllen clients.
